MARCH UNITS: 2008 SUNSHINE WEEK—March 16-22

Now in its fourth year, Sunshine Week is a national initiative that calls attention to threats to “sunshine” or transparency in government. On July 4, 1966, President Lyndon Johnson signed the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). We have the right to know what our government is doing. However, recently “sunshine laws” and the opportunities for citizens to gain access to information have been constricted.

The League of Women Voters joins news media, students, libraries, government officials, and non-government organizations to keep our community strong, healthy and vibrant. We start with having an open government. Sunshine Honorary Chairs this year are Ben Bradlee of the Washington Post, Tom Brokaw of NBC News and Judy Woodruff of PBS NewsHour.

Celebrate Sunshine Week at any or all of the following programs and bring guests.

President's Corner

Dear League Members,

The letter arrived from LWVUS last month. "Permission has been granted to the League of Women Voters of Albuquerque/Bernalillo County to change its name to the League of Women Voters of Central New Mexico and to change its basis of organization to include Bernalillo, Sandoval, Torrance and Valencia Counties effective as of January 26, 2008."

You're not going to see any changes in our local League for a couple of months, however. Even though our membership approved of the name change through the consensus process, it cannot legally take effect until it is voted on at our annual meeting on May 3. That is when we will vote on changing the bylaws to reflect the new name. The Board of Directors thought it prudent to wait until then to use Central New Mexico as our name on anything. With your approval we will begin the next fiscal year with our new name.

This has been a long process and there will be more to do once the vote takes place, but we're almost there. I hope you will plan to attend the annual meeting and participate in the vote. We have operated as Albuquerque/Bernalillo County for sixty years, so you can help us make local League history!

I would like to extend thanks to some of our hardworking volunteers again this month. JoAnne Ramponi has done an excellent job of keeping our office running smoothly. She and the group of volunteers who staffed the office during the Democratic presidential caucus are to be especially commended for fielding the huge number of calls that came in. Based on that experience we know we will be busy for the upcoming primary and general election. Please give some thought to volunteering in the office during those times if you cannot do it on a regular basis.

And thank you to Therese Barts and Mary Mulvany for taking the lead in distributing the Who's Who around Sandoval County. Therese, a graphic artist, has also made some brightly colored holders for the brochures so that they can be easily seen. These efforts should help the League become more visible in Sandoval County.

Keep up the good work everyone.

Diane

ADVOCACY CORNER

The Steering Committee has identified two topics of focus for LWV/ABC: Ethics and Campaign Finance Reform and Voter ID. We have knowledgeable members to monitor the topics and represent League in coalition groups. The current status of these topics is as follows:

Ethics and Campaign Finance Reform—LWV/ABC will be asked to participate in a stakeholders review of Albuquerque's first effort with public financing of campaigns. The general opinion is that this first effort, which took place in the October 2007 election, was a very successful process. However, there is a need for some improvements, several of which were identified at the Evening Unit in January. Councilors Winter and O'Malley provided specific information about issues and process, then involved the group in a motivating discussion.

Voter ID—LWV/ABC'S President, Diane Goldfarb, and 1st Vice President, Josephine Porter, continue to monitor the Voter ID issues at the local, state and national levels. You can participate in the monitoring through the media and the LWVUS and LWV/ABC websites. Watch for the Supreme Court decision regarding Indiana.

The next Advocacy Steering Committee meeting will be Wednesday, March 5, 2008, from 1-3 p.m., at the LWV/ABC office. You are always welcome to come, listen and ask questions. Dee Watkins, Chair

The responsibilities of the Attorney General's Office include enforcing the laws relating to open government and ethics in government such as the Public Records Act, the Open Meetings Act, and the Governmental Conduct Act. Since his election, Attorney General King has been very proactive and he has much to tell us about New Mexico, our state law enforcement and your right to know.

In addition to League members, we are inviting friends and the public to participate so we expect a full room of New Mexicans eager to listen and learn. We have only fifty reservations to offer for this event, so get your reservations in early! Information on reservations appears below.

Harvey is a "pooka", in this case a 6-foot-tall invisible rabbit, who accompanies his likeable friend Elwood P. Dowd around town. The two companions spend their time going from bar to bar. The play is well-known to many Americans. First produced on Broadway in 1944, it was adapted for the screen in 1950, earning James Stewart an Oscar nomination. There have been television versions and many a school theater troupe has presented Harvey.

Sorry we are unable to put on the after-theater party this year, but the afternoon will be fun and you have the satisfaction of knowing that proceeds from the event will help us keep the League office running.

Please send or bring your check for $25/person to the League office, 2403 San Mateo NE, W-16C, Albuquerque 87110 today. Include the names of all those attending so nametags can be printed.

THANKS FOR OFFICE HELP

February 4 and 5 were busy days in the League office. We handled over 600 calls during the Democratic caucus. There were the usual calls of: Am I registered? Where do I go to vote? Then there were the calls of: Why don't Republicans get to vote? Do Independents get to vote? What does DTS mean on my voter card?

Our office was open on both days and the following volunteers were there to answer questions: Andrea Targhetta, Anne Letherer, Marilyn Morgan, DeDe Eckles, Marilyn Hunter-Torburn, Susan McKinstry, Ellen Evans, Josephine Porter, Cheryl Haaker, Sandra Browne, Diane Goldfarb and Margaret Krahenbuhl. Thanks to you all.

We have two more opportunities for this community service: the primary in June and the general election in November. If you would like to help, please let me know.

JoAnne Ramponi, Temporary Office Manager

New Mexico Redistricting 2001—What Went Wrong?

Submitted by the LWV/ABC Fair Representation Committee

Redistricting can be an agonizing experience. Shifts in population leave some legislators voting on a redistricting bill that may cost them reelection. Some residents will be moved into new districts, some sections of the state lose power in the lawmaking process to other sections, and political control of the legislature may move from one party to another or from one political philosophy to another. The importance of redistricting to basic citizenship simply cannot be overstated.

On March 22, 2001, the United States Census bureau released the decennial count of the population of New Mexico---1, 819,046---a 20.1% increase over the past decade. Based on the new census, the House of Representative districts were grossly mal-apportioned due to areas of the state losing population and other areas experiencing dramatic growth.

The Legislature was then faced with the task of redistricting its own house and senate seats, the Public Regulation Commission districts, the State Board of Education districts, selected magistrate court districts and the state's three congressional districts.

With a Democratic state legislature and a Republican governor, the state faced a potentially contentious redistricting process. To allow the legislature to perform redistricting in conformity with state requirements, a special legislative session was called for the fall of 2001, and in anticipation of that special session, the bi-partisan New Mexico Legislative Council adopted without dissent certain criteria for the legislature to consider in formulating redistricting plans. The Legislative Council also formed a bi-partisan Interim Redistricting Committee to study the question of redistricting and make recommendations to the full Legislature.

To fulfill these objectives the Redistricting Committee traveled throughout New Mexico holding 14 public meetings in 12 communities to receive comments and input concerning certain congressional redistricting concepts and many plans were prepared for the special legislative session which began on September 4, 2001. On September 20, 2001, the Legislature sent the Governor two senate plans, two House of Representatives plans and one plan each for the congressional, public regulation commission, and state board of education. The governor signed the public regulation commission plan and vetoed all others.

Litigation ensued over the lack of new congressional, house of representatives, senate and state board of education redistricting plans, as well as the public regulation commission plan. Challenges were soon dropped, agreed upon or compromise was reached on many issues but redistricting of the house of representatives and congressional districts, primarily a legislative duty, was not accomplished and therefore left to the court system. The Governor petitioned a federal panel to take jurisdiction over the redistricting process; however, the panel rejected his case on November 20, 2001. The Governor then petitioned to have the presiding judge removed from the case. Initially unsuccessful, the state Supreme Court, however, soon ordered a change of the presiding judge in the First Judicial District Court.

With no legislative decision made, suits were filed until a total of six plans were presented to the court, three each by Republicans and Democrats. The congressional redistricting case was tried from December 11, 2001 until January 2, 2002. Evaluation of two plans involved numerous and serious political considerations that the Court determined should be made by the Legislature and Governor working within the political process and not by the court.

Of the remaining plans, the court adopted the Vigil “Least Change” plan which shifted the minimum population necessary to bring New Mexico into compliance with the one-person, one-vote requirement set by the United States Supreme Court. This plan equalized population among the three congressional districts by shifting just eight precincts among districts. On January 8, 2002, judgment was entered and no party sought review of that judgment.

The state house districting phase of the case resulted in eleven days of trial. During the course of the trial, it became obvious that in 1991 the New Mexico Legislature had failed to provide adequately for equal Native American electoral access in Northwestern New Mexico; the Court first considered partial plans submitted by the Navajo and Jicarilla Apache Nations and determined that certain proposals did indeed offer the best remedy for the current plans’ equal protection and Voting Rights Act violations.

The governor submitted no plan nor endorsed any of the plans presented, his position being that the court should draw its own plan. That request was rejected as not necessary under the law and not possible or fair with the time restraints brought on by the coming election, since no court drawn plan could receive the scrutiny from all sides as the six submitted plans had received.

In evaluating the plans submitted by the parties, the Court stated it appropriate to give thoughtful consideration that HB 3 and HB 7 were plans developed through a process which reflected the will of the people, expressed through their elected representatives, and that HB 3 was a compromise plan which attempted to balance the competing social, economic, geographic and racial interests which comprised the state.

On January 24, 2002, findings and conclusions were issued, with the Court adopting the second plan passed by the legislature (HB 3), with alterations to nine house districts to accommodate plans submitted by the Navajo Nation and the Jicarilla Apache Nation.

Costs for the mandated process of redistricting totaled approximately $1,256,600. After the Legislative and Executive branches could not reach consensus and the Governor vetoed proposed plans, the process moved to litigation and the court system, causing the costs to rise significantly, estimated to be some $3,300,000. Total costs of the redistricting process outlined by the New Mexico Legislative Council Service were estimated to be at approximately $5.2 million.
